Cheat Sheet—January 3, 2022

Happy New Year and welcome to our January 2022 cheat sheet, Let's look forward to an ever-improving year as The Fritsma Factor and Cheat Sheet motor on. We've enjoyed an uncharacteristically eventful December as you will see when you click on our several entries.

December 2021 and January 2022 Quick Questions

Our December 2021 Quick Question presents a hypothetical case, "The resident orders a thrombosis risk profile on an inpatient being treated for a pulmonary embolism [PE]. How do you respond?" This question is inspired by a case study we developed for Dr. Catherine Otto's Rutgers' CLSC 5124 Advanced Hemostasis fall, 2021 online graduate course. Click Dec 2021 QQ Summary: Thrombosis Risk Profile for the survey results and discussion.

The January 2022 Quick Question is another case study that states, "A patient experiences soft tissue bleeding and poor wound healing. The PT, PTT, and TT are normal. What follow-up profile do you recommend?" Please choose your answer in the right column and add your comments in the comment section of the accompanying entry.

Abbreviations

It is easy to lose your bearings when reading scientific texts and articles filled with abbreviations. Click the Abbreviations section in our Resources menu for what we hope is a comprehensive list. We're currently updating the list, and we invite you to send updated and new abbreviations to george@fritsmafactor.com for immediate inclusion.

Coming Events

Visit our recently updated Conference Calendar, also in our Resources menu, to learn of coming hemostasis events, both virtual and in-person. The first in-person 2022 event on our list is VENOUS2022, February 23–26. If you don't see your event, please alert me at george@fritsmafactor.com with title, sponsor, time, date, and location.

Thank you for your loyalty to The Fritsma Factor.
